THE SCALPER: an entirely original Quarterly Exposition of the laws of health and of medicine and dietetics, by EDWARD H. DIXON, M. D., New York.

It is the title of a Magazine which we see occasionally, but always with increased satisfaction; for its teachings and contents, although referable to, and predicted upon, a highly developed condition of social life, as in New York, London, Paris, Philadelphia and other large cities—yet hold up those primary truths, those sanitary principles which should govern both city and country in their domestic relations and public works. Many might object to the trenchant, scathing style of this Magazine, but admit the terrible dangers, the blind infatuation, against which it is directed, and it becomes evident that, though more might have overdone the thing, yet less would not have effected the object of arousing public attention to a proper consideration of, and inquiry into the laws of health—laws that should be as widely spread, as well understood and as well remembered, as the multiplication table—laws in the ignorance of which we live a life of chance, gambling with health, until ruined and disappointed we stake our souls on a chance, as we have staked our bodies already, and living without guide here, die without hope hereafter.

We would, but have no room, quote extensively; we, therefore, must content ourselves with the following extracts, which will give an insight into the tenor and style of the Magazine:

The Martyrdom of the Innocent, &c.
"Forasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, ye did it unto me." When Christ uttered this touching sentiment of his regard for infancy, he conveyed the emphatic assurance of the estimate he would and undoubtedly make were he here to-day, of the piety of some of his "very respectable" followers—the New York landlords. We have so long been accustomed to make the most liberal estimate of the intellectual infamy of a large portion of the human family, that we hope our pious friends will be content with the usual measure of their denunciation, if we insist upon the implied condemnation the Saviour indeed unintentionally by what he subsequently said in such terrible language of those "Pharisees and money-changers" who grow rich upon the poverty and ignorance of that large class of mentally-ad-vantaged infants with which the world is filled. We insist upon classifying every man and woman as in a state of intellectual infancy, and incapable of protecting themselves from the consequences of their own actions, until they are able to do so, unless they are acquainted with the natural laws which govern their existence in health and disease. Without this knowledge, a man may be a "successful merchant," a "sound lawyer," a "great theologian," a "wonderful mechanical genius," even an "excellent family physician," or a "pious priest," but we call him mentally a poor, feeble creature, unable to protect himself from the consequences of his own actions, and consequently, or from the machinations of the quack.
It is every whit as creditable to a man's intellect to be a believer in Mormonism, Johanna Southcote, or Roman Catholic miracles, as not to understand the laws of his body, and yet this knowledge is rarer than any other amongst the human family; they are continually liable to a multitude of diseases which cut short the existence of the fearful proportion of one half of their number in infancy, whilst the terrible consequences of the ignorance of their progenitors, entail upon the survivors diseases which embitter their lives and so lower the attenuated spark of vitality, that we have cause to thank God for the benevolence he shows in cutting off so many of the feeble offspring before they attain the age necessary for continuing the race.

For want of this very knowledge, the horrible consequences of the volatilized air of tobacco, circulating through the smoke and inhaled into the lungs of the smoker, through the mucous membrane, has for three hundred years not even been suspected to prostrate the spinal nerves and virile powers, till half the male race in our country have become pig-mies and stupid tobacco-poisoned sots.

For want of this knowledge, our women have lost sight of the examples of mental and physical gracefulness as set forth in the sublime characters of the "women of the Bible and Shakespeare, and the ideals of Greek sculpture, and adopted the wretched and silly manners of the American boarding-school, and the vulgar and tawdry mongrel French milliners of Bridalway.

For want of this knowledge, sleeping-rooms are built in our cities next to metallic flat roofs, and that in a climate where the thermometer goes up to ninety unventilated holes are constructed for the rich farmer's children under great shingle-roofed farmhouses; and triangular nooks and corners in the vulgar cottages of ignorant cities, under roofs originally designed for the shelter of the poor, are appropriated as sleeping-rooms for the children who go into the country to get health, till their poor little bodies are wasted away and their blood so impoverished, that the blood vessels can no longer contain it, but permit it to percolate through their relaxed tissues and make dropsical brains and bellies; the poor little creatures either screaming with agony or stupefied with languor by an Irish peasant nurse, while the mother is trying to fascinate some travelling gentleman's valet, who calls himself a count, at a vulgar watering-place.

Churches are full with pent-up breath and rank with ecclesiastical and human exhalations, till morally enlightened men is willing to sit in them.

Ignorant and ambitious citizens are allowed to build up five stories of brick and mortar over their tenements, and often the whole of their lots until the sun and air is so shut out of their own and their neighbors' houses, that with the aid of the curtains and shutters, their wives and children's air-fun-ished faces look as though they had been starved for months.

Our young men and women are compelled to spend their youth in studying in a wretched fragmentary manner, mere scraps of languages, knowledge, and history; the jargon of scientific hand-books; the doings of defunct heroes; the lies of historians, the praises of robbers and murderers; and the myths of gods and goddesses, ending with the exquisite accomplishments of billiards and the poika.

Why educate and refine our people, if they say something and do nothing? Why educate and refine our people, if they say something and do nothing? Why
